A History Portfolio

A student created a portfolio about how travel and communication changed societies. She began with a research question rather than a list of famous people: How did networks connect communities, and whose experiences were left out of the usual accounts? She compared a map, a trade-route reading, and a translated historical account. Her notes separated quotations, paraphrases, and her own interpretations. When two accounts disagreed, she recorded their authors, purposes, and contexts instead of choosing the more dramatic version. The final presentation used a timeline but did not imply that every change happened everywhere at once. It included an argument supported by evidence and a section explaining limitations. The student concluded that a strong portfolio shows not only a polished product but also how the researcher checked and revised the work.

W1 background: New routes linked trade and migration, while conquest, exploitation, disease, and enslavement damaged communities. European accounts alone omit experiences of many people affected. This is an assessment background note written for this packet, not an actual historical primary-source quotation.

W2 background: Reason, rights, consent, limits on government, or debates about equality. Rights/equality claims often coexisted with exclusion and slavery. This is an assessment background note written for this packet, not an actual historical primary-source quotation.

W3 background: It comes from the relevant period/event or direct participants, depending on the question. Perspective, purpose, bias, and limited knowledge affect accounts. This is an assessment background note written for this packet, not an actual historical primary-source quotation.

W4 background: It selects events and scales, leaving out many experiences and connections. Evidence-based argument, source comparison, connections, and reflection. This is an assessment background note written for this packet, not an actual historical primary-source quotation.
